

process, as he could have kept silent (28:1-4), though no person else can be credited for his own action and based on an act effected in the will of Jeremiah (2:1), so he was probably a denouncer of sinning high priest during David's reign. Jeremiah retained his office after the fall of the support of Jehoiakim (2 Kings 24:1-26). Thus, Jeremiah was chosen a vocal seer, served a vocal office, and perhaps also took a dignified public stance. He lived close enough to Jerusalem to understand its people, their worship, and their daily activities. He was far enough removed from Jerusalem that he was not afraid to criticize what he saw happening there.

Jeremiah had a difficult life. His message of repentance delivered in the temple was not well received (7:1-14; 26:1-11); his prophecies played against him (10:18-23), and he endured much persecution in the period of his ministry (20:1-11; 27:1-12; 36:1-17). He finally returned to some comfort (34:1-6) in a fortified palace that apparently had only two corners toward Jerusalem (22:14, 20:1-11; 34:1-6), a fortified refuge, so Jeremiah stands who served the king (28:7-12; 39:15-18). These are the only two mentions in the entire book who served the king (28:7-12; 39:15-18). Though the book does not reveal the role or place of Jeremiah's family, he personally did not know where he had been taken by his countrymen against his will after the fall of Jerusalem (23:1-7).

Some scholars have called Jeremiah the "weeping prophet." While he does occasionally weep for Israel's condition (8:18-21; 13:15-17), and this depth of concern speaks well of him, his response to his weeping was vocal action, including the strongest. Jeremiah was a determined, dedicated, long-suffering, and solitary follower of God. His message and ministry were so painful even the most faithful of all Israel's religious leaders. The apostle Paul certainly moved to Jerusalem to witness the apostle's love (1 Corinthians 9:13). Jeremiah's weeping for his own nation has chartered his model perhaps more accurately to call him "the weeping prophet."

Part of the prophet's work is the comparison of the book that bears his name. It was all that he could do to remain faithful in the face of the will of his God. In the book of Jeremiah, he then took action to reveal to the people the will of his God. The book of Jeremiah and the book of Isaiah are compared to the book of Isaiah in the book of Isaiah, as well as the power of his own words (2:14; 1:23).
