Abstract. The effects of 2 feeding strategies (a) 100% through the rumen and (b) 50% through the rumen and 50% through the small intestine on the digestibility of organic acids and organic acids in the rumen were studied in 2 experiments. In experiment 1, the digestibility of organic acids was significantly higher in the rumen than in the small intestine. In experiment 2, the digestibility of organic acids was significantly higher in the rumen than in the small intestine. The results of the 2 experiments suggest that the digestibility of organic acids is higher in the rumen than in the small intestine.

Employees' behavior is not as simple as saying "good" or "bad" and "right" or "wrong." It is more complex and more subtle. It is a matter of degree and of context. It is a matter of how the behavior is perceived by others. It is a matter of how the behavior is perceived by the employee himself. It is a matter of how the behavior is perceived by the organization. It is a matter of how the behavior is perceived by the community. It is a matter of how the behavior is perceived by the world.
