

 The McGraw-Hill Companies[illegible]

It is worth also noting that very few respondents following the 1995 elections perceived the new strategy as a source of organizational failure. There are only two specific questions in the survey that the new strategy was not well received on. Of the other 14 questions, the ratings of 1 (strongly in favor) or 2 (somewhat in favor) were the norm. The strategy following the 1995 elections was seen as a source of performance improvement in terms of being able to attract and retain the best people, being able to gain the support of a substantial number of the workforce, and the level of commitment of the workforce. Although respondents perceived the larger losses of the new buildings as negative to the company, within 18 months of the new buildings in place of the 1995, new hires were increasing at the same rate that were in decline during the 1990s. In the 1990s, turnover, absenteeism, resignation, death, etc., in general, was not a substantial factor causing loss of talent or capacity. Contrarily, when the new buildings followed the new business strategy, there was a
