don't really breed but in the 1900s the GSD was recognized by the American Kennel Club AKC in 1908. In modern times it remains one of the most popular dog breeds. Originally bred for herding dogs with Shiloh herders resulted in many shepherds. There is no need for breeding of these dogs to have a sloping back rather than the tight back with working dogs. This practice has been replaced as leading to poor quality German shepherds have more time with more length hair with thick undercoat. They should be brushed a few days. German herders have a relatively high height and they can be a bit of a pain in grooming. Be prepared to have a regular thorough vacuum frequently. Luckily this also resists dirt and doesn't require you to bathe or groom more than once a month. In fact too frequent bathing will irritate the skin.
