

Enzyme Activity Guided Inquiry Lab Turnip Peroxidase

Introduction

Peroxidase enzymes are widely distributed in plants and animals, including bacteria, to protect cells against the effects of oxidative stress and cell damage due to hydrogen peroxide. Peroxidases are easily extracted from turnips and other root vegetables and provide a model enzyme for studying enzyme activity—how the rate of an enzyme-catalyzed reaction depends on biotic and abiotic factors. Enzyme activity studies reflect enzyme structure and function and provide the foundation for understanding the mechanism or theory of enzyme action.

Background

The term peroxidase refers to both a class of oxidoreductase enzymes and to specific enzymes within that class. As a general class of enzymes, peroxidases catalyze the oxidation–reduction decomposition reaction of hydrogen peroxide. There are two general types of peroxidases—catalase and peroxidase. Catalase catalyzes the disproportionation reaction of hydrogen peroxide to water and oxygen gas (Equation 1). In reactions mediated by catalase, hydrogen peroxide substrate molecules act as both oxidizing agent (electron acceptor) and reducing agent (electron donor). In contrast, peroxidase acts in the presence of other naturally occurring organic reducing agents, such as ascorbic acid and glutathione, to catalyze the decomposition of hydrogen peroxide. Organic reducing agents, abbreviated AH_2 , transfer hydrogen atoms and electrons to hydrogen peroxide, resulting in the formation of water and oxidized organic substrates such as A_2 in Equation 2.

The differences in the two equations shown above provide a basis for studying the enzyme activity of turnip peroxidase in this guided-inquiry laboratory investigation. Many endogenous organic compounds may be used as reducing agents in Equation 2. One of the most common and convenient reducing agents for this purpose is guaiacol, a colorless compound having the formula $C_7H_8O_2$. Oxidation of guaiacol according to Equation 2 converts it to a dark orange compound called tetraguaiacol. The rate of the reaction may be followed by measuring the absorbance or color intensity of the orange product as a function of time.

Ionic and Solvent Effects on the Activity of Horseradish Peroxidase Javier Perez-Villasenor, 1964 Enzyme Assays
Robert Eisenthal, Michael J. Danson, 1992 Enzyme assays are among the most frequently performed procedures in biochemistry and are routinely used to estimate the amount of enzyme present in a cell or tissue to follow the purification of an enzyme or to determine the kinetic parameters of a system The range of techniques used to measure the rate of an enzyme catalysed reaction is limited only by the nature of the chemical change and the ingenuity of the investigator This book describes the design and execution of enzyme assays covering both general principles and specific chapters Building upon the highly popular first edition this book combines revised or rewritten chapters with entirely new contributions Topics include experimental protocols covering photometric radiometric HPLC and electrochemical assays along with methods for determining enzyme assays after gel electrophoresis The theory underlying each method is outlined together with a description of the instrumentation sensitivity and sources of error Also included are chapters on the principles of enzyme assay and kinetic studies techniques for enzyme extraction high throughput screening statistical analysis of enzyme kinetic data and the determination of active site concentration This second edition of Enzyme Assays will be valuable not only to biochemists but to researchers in all areas of the life sciences Effect of Irradiation on Peroxidase Hamid Abdullah Al-Jasin, 1966
