These findings suggest that future tests of the χ^2 -Goodman-Kruskal test with χ^2 and G-K tests give equal or less favourable results for marginalised categorical variables. A G-K test of independence is preferable to χ^2 for categorical variables with many categories, including sparse data, contributing to the most significant level of association. For an example of marginal probabilities with categorical variables, the marginal impact of disability on education is shown in Table 2. The χ^2 test is also used to quantify the impact of categorical variables and disability probabilities (Table 3). The χ^2 test is also used to test the hypothesis of independence between categorical variables (Table 4).
