Leaves appear rather in mass, sometimes overlapping, etc., and their increasing with maturity (sometimes in the same fashion) suggest a degree of similarity. In some cases of extreme maturity, open natural areas contain numerous Scirpus/Ischaemum spp. or Allypium in an extremely common way. These plants will come from the forest in the adjacent hills and, in the same way, will also be found in the hills of the same area of occurrence. In fact, the difference may be the presence of Scirpus spp. in the hills of the same area, but the difference is not the same.

Further genetic studies of some, nonrecombining selfing sites, and their association with recombining sites on the same chromosome suggest different evolutionary histories for the two sets of nuclear markers. This is consistent with the fact that selfing and recombining sites are differently associated with chloroplast haplotypes. These results and some other studies in Brassica and other species may provide important insights into the evolution of the Brassica genus. In particular, they suggest that chloroplast and nuclear DNA divergence post Brassica speciation is protracted and different across the genome in Brassica and Arabidopsis.

Human sperm cells, on the other hand, are not self-propagating. The male gametes will remain inactive in the female's vagina until they are fertilized. The sperm cells will remain inactive until they are fertilized by the egg cell. The sperm cells will remain inactive until they are fertilized by the egg cell.
