

Section II

Oral Language

Rationale

The development of literacy begins through the use of spoken language. Oral language provides a means for effective children as they begin to construct conceptual knowledge through words. Children who are developing language appropriately will demonstrate an increasingly complex use of words in explanations. Competencies in literacy through the production of structural relationship of words in spoken language will provide indicators of the child's knowledge about meaning and communication. Given the close relationship between reading and language, we could expect that children with well-developed oral language skills and appropriate attention will never have passed test easily.

While oral language has many functions, most of which occur in a social context, the purpose of these assessments are limited in scope. This oral language assessment relates to children's ability to effectively use semantic, morphological and syntactic, phonetic and grammar coding systems while communicating to support the learning of reading and writing skills.

We note no consistent assessment practices for each child in the importance of literacy development. The Oral Language assessment is used. These tools help teachers understand what individual children know specifically about speaking and listening to construct and communicate ideas.

Definition

Oral is defined as speaking and listening. In this document we use the term Oral Language which includes the expressive (speaking) and receptive (listening) aspects of language.

The chart on the following page provides an overview of Oral Language assessment in the MEPP. Each tool is identified, along with the purpose for the assessment, and the appropriate grade level for use of the assessment. This chart is meant to be a guide for the teacher's choice of assessment tools. The selection of the appropriate assessment is best determined through the teacher's ongoing observation of students within the classroom environment.
