QUICK-CHECK questions

- 1 Identify the following statements as true or false.
 - a All forest communities have a similar number of populations.
False: The number of populations or species richness in a forest community would be expected to depend on both area and latitude (distance from equator).
 - b The species richness of a terrestrial ecosystem is in general related to latitude of the ecosystem.
True
 - c Species richness gives a measure of the number of different populations in a community.
True

- 2 Two grassland communities, A and B, cover a similar area, but community A has a greater number of populations than community B.
 - a Which community has the greater species richness?
Community A with its greater number of populations has the greater species richness.
 - b Which community is expected to be closer to the equator?
Because of its greater species richness, community A is expected to be closer to the equator.

- 3 Identify the following as true or false.
 - a An age structure plot with a pyramid shape is indicative of a growing population.
True: Such a structure has a broad base, with most individuals in the population being at reproductive age or younger (see figure 15.19(a)).
 - b Abundance of a population is also known as population density.
True: Abundance of a population is the same as population density and indicates the number of individuals of a given species per unit area.
 - c Total counts are more commonly carried out than the use of sampling techniques.
False: Total counts are both difficult and costly. More commonly, sampling techniques are used to estimate the abundance of a population.

- 4 Give one possible explanation for a clumped distribution in a population.
A clumped distribution of a population suggests that, within an area, only some parts have conditions suitable for survival of individuals. In the case of an animal population, it may be because only these parts provide an adequate source of food or shelter for
