Administrative: administrative structure.

During your research, identify and explain how business organizations or other institutions, if at all, in their development or operation are like, not like, and different from administrative structures (i.e., administrative organizations).

1. A business is a group of people who work together to produce goods or services for sale to other people. It is a legal entity that is separate from its owners and managers. It has a purpose, a structure, and a culture. It is a social institution that is part of the larger society. It is a complex system of relationships and interactions that is constantly changing and evolving. It is a dynamic and flexible organization that can adapt to changing circumstances. It is a powerful force in the world, and it has the potential to shape the future.
