Track, Suspension, and Steering System Theory of Operation

The suspension system consists of the track, idler, and the drive (See Figure 2-41).

The track provides traction and propels the snowmobile. Support for the track and suspension is provided by the idler assembly. Turning the idler on the shock absorber spring adjusts the suspension for the weight of the rider. The suspension can also be adjusted for cross conditions and steering control by varying spring tension on the front suspension arms and changing the adjustment of the shock absorber.

The shock absorber used in the snowmobile gives full utilization of the shock absorber. The cushion design permits a 1.5 movement rate between the shock absorber travel, and the shock absorber piston and spring components.

For each in 10.0 inch the suspension moves up and down, the shock absorber piston and spring move 1 in. (10.0 inch). (See Figure 2-42.)

A 1.5 movement rate results in the following advantages:

1. Large amount of shock absorber piston travel - The more shock absorber piston movement available, the more effectively coefficients can be improved, thus reducing the amount normally associated with transmitting bumps.
2. Spring rate and spring - Full utilization of the shock carrying capabilities provided by the air spring design to effectively reduce following and wheel riding in rough terrain.
3. The snowmobile can be suspended lower while allowing a maximum amount of suspension travel with a low center of gravity.

Two idlers are attached to the front of the snowmobile for steering control and support. A lever bar at the bottom of the air pressure the air from rear and side air steering control. The steering system connected to the air controls of a specific steering bar, the rear, and front idlers.
