Endocrine System: WORKING TOGETHER

Each organ system works with other systems within the body to do its "job". See below for more information on the way that the endocrine system interacts with other organ systems.

Endocrine System: FACTS

Endocrine System: PROBLEMS

Most of the time, the production system works perfectly well (however, occasional problems can arise).

Abstract

Cholesterol is a substance that causes high blood glucose (sugar) levels. It is caused by the body, being soluble in other proteins or can be absorbed from the diet. In the presence of insulin, sugar gets into the cells to be used.

Endocrine System: GLANDS

Figure 1 illustrates that producers and retailers determine the purchase quantity in the first period, and then the retailer determines the price in the second period. In the third period, the manufacturer determines the price. The manufacturer determines the price in the third period because the manufacturer has the most information about the market. The manufacturer knows the demand curve, the cost function, and the retailer's reaction function.

Endocrine System: FEEDBACK LOOPS

the glands react by releasing changes in the blood in the same way. The glands release an increase of hormones in the blood to turn down secretion (in and out) of a hormone, the glands stop producing it for a bit. (Feedback loops are discussed later, allowing organisms to maintain themselves.)

and of blood sugar (glucose) by the hormones insulin and glucagon. In an example of a homeostatic mechanism, blood glucose rises when a person eats, so the pancreas secretes insulin. This insulin acts to uptake glucose, which will make blood sugar levels more normal (sugar levels could otherwise be too high). The pancreas also secretes glucagon, which has the opposite effect. If a person hasn't eaten in a while, blood sugar drops, so the pancreas secretes glucagon, which will make blood sugar levels rise. This mechanism allows the body to maintain blood sugar levels.
