

Mrs. Ludwig tells the admitting nurse, Mr. Jackson, that her husband wanders almost all the time. He has difficulty finding the right words for things (aphasia) and becomes frustrated and angry when that happens. Sometimes, he does not seem to recognize the family (agnosia). Once, he thought that Daisy was a thief breaking into the house and attacked her with a broom handle. Telling this story causes Daisy to break down into heavy sobs: "What's happened to my father? He was so kind and gentle. Oh, God... I've lost my father."

Mrs. Ludwig tells Mr. Jackson that her husband can sometimes participate in dressing himself; at other times, when he appears confused over what goes where, he needs total assistance. At this point, Mrs. Ludwig begins to cry uncontrollably, saying "I can't bear to part with him, but I can't do it anymore. I feel as if I've betrayed him."

Mr. Jackson then focuses his attention on Mrs. Ludwig and her experience. He states, "This a difficult decision for you." He says that he supports their decision to move Mr. Ludwig to the Alzheimer's unit. However, he is also aware that families usually have conflicting and intense emotional reactions of guilt, depression, loss, anger, and other painful feelings. Mr. Jackson suggests that Mrs. Ludwig talk to other families with a cognitively impaired member. "It might help you to know that you are not alone, and having contact with others to share your grief can be healing." One of the groups he suggests is the Alzheimer's Association, a well-known self-help group.
