Chapter 1: The Nature of Life

Question 1 (a) What is life?

Answer: Life is defined as:

Metabolism and homeostasis, reproduction, growth and development, response to stimuli, feeding, excretion, movement and ageing.

Explain each of these:

1. Metabolism: The chemical reactions that occur within an organism to maintain its structure and function. It involves the breakdown of food into simpler molecules and the synthesis of complex molecules from simpler ones.
2. Homeostasis: The ability of an organism to maintain a stable internal environment despite changes in the external environment. This involves the regulation of temperature, pH, and other factors.
3. Reproduction: The process by which an organism produces offspring. This can be asexual (involving only one parent) or sexual (involving two parents).
4. Growth and Development: The increase in size and complexity of an organism over time. This involves the differentiation of cells into specialized tissues and organs.
5. Feeding: The process by which an organism obtains energy and nutrients from its environment. This can be autotrophic (producing its own food) or heterotrophic (consuming other organisms).
6. Excretion: The process by which an organism removes waste products from its body. This is necessary to maintain a stable internal environment.
7. Movement: The ability of an organism to move from one place to another. This is important for finding food, avoiding predators, and finding mates.
8. Ageing: The process by which an organism becomes older. This involves the accumulation of damage to cells and tissues over time.

Question 1 (b) Name the following tissues:

Epithelial tissue:

This tissue covers the surface of organs and forms the lining of body cavities.

Connective tissue:

This tissue supports and connects other tissues in the body.

Muscle tissue:

This tissue contracts to produce movement. It is found in the heart, muscles, and other parts of the body.

Nerve tissue:

This tissue carries electrical impulses from one part of the body to another.
