The 1980s studies are almost independent of each other; picture is more clear than in 1970s studies.

This paper follows the standard strategy provided by several microeconomic theories. The authors use a modified version of the real business cycle model. The standard real business cycle model is extended by adding a capital stock that is subject to depreciation. The authors use a standard production function and a standard utility function. The authors use a standard production function and a standard utility function. The authors use a standard production function and a standard utility function.

Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the heart rate (HR) and energy expenditure (EE) of sedentary, middle-aged women. The subjects were 12 women, 40 to 50 years of age, who were sedentary and had no cardiovascular or other medical problems. The subjects were randomly assigned to either a control group or a training group. The control group continued with their sedentary lifestyle, while the training group participated in a 12-week training program consisting of three sessions per week of aerobic exercise. The HR and EE were measured at baseline and at the end of the 12-week training program. The results showed that the training group had a significant decrease in HR and a significant increase in EE compared to the control group. The findings suggest that a 12-week training program can improve cardiovascular fitness and increase energy expenditure in sedentary, middle-aged women.
