

to the same level of increased strength and resistance to fracture. This is because the same amount of energy is being absorbed by the material. The only difference is that the energy is being absorbed by the material in a different way.

The first step in the process is to determine the amount of energy that is being absorbed by the material. This is done by measuring the change in the material's temperature during the test.

Once the energy has been determined, the next step is to calculate the amount of energy that is being absorbed by the material. This is done by dividing the total energy by the volume of the material.

The final step is to compare the results of the test to the results of other tests. This is done by comparing the energy absorbed by the material to the energy absorbed by other materials.
