

SPERMATOPHYTES

Notes (Study) Spermatophytes (Angiosperms)

1. Spermatophytes include all vascular plants with flagellated sperm (Spermatophytes)

Angiosperms (flowering plants) and gymnosperms (non-flowering plants) are the two groups of spermatophytes. They are distinguished by the presence or absence of flowers and fruits.

Angiosperms are the most diverse group of plants, with over 300,000 species. They are found in all habitats and are the most important group of plants for humans.

Gymnosperms are the second most diverse group of plants, with about 10,000 species. They are found in temperate and boreal regions and are important for timber production.

Angiosperms and gymnosperms are both seed plants. They have a diploid sporophyte and a haploid gametophyte. The gametophyte is dependent on the sporophyte for nutrition.

Angiosperms have a more complex reproductive system than gymnosperms. They have a flower, which is a modified leaf, that contains the reproductive organs. The flower is the site of pollination and fertilization.

Gymnosperms have a simpler reproductive system. They have a cone, which is a modified shoot, that contains the reproductive organs. The cone is the site of pollination and fertilization.

Angiosperms have a more efficient reproductive system than gymnosperms. They have a more complex flower and a more efficient pollination system. They also have a more efficient seed dispersal system.

Gymnosperms have a less efficient reproductive system. They have a simpler cone and a less efficient pollination system. They also have a less efficient seed dispersal system.

Angiosperms are the most important group of plants for humans. They provide food, clothing, and shelter. They are also important for the environment.

Gymnosperms are also important for humans. They provide timber and are important for the environment. They are also important for the study of plant evolution.

Angiosperms and gymnosperms are both important groups of plants. They are both important for humans and the environment. They are also important for the study of plant evolution.

Angiosperms and gymnosperms are both important groups of plants. They are both important for humans and the environment. They are also important for the study of plant evolution.
