help them control any or suspected drug or drug-related issues on the border in long-term, short-term or in the immediate future in the form of full-time staff. The work surrounding their other duties should nevertheless be maintained and possibly held in reserve in the event of an emergency situation or upon early recall.

It is my hope that this important second step would lead to the first staffing issue. The longer we are able to delay the first step, the more and more serious the situation will become. My agency will be more prepared to respond to the situation's end, but this will not prevent and much less alleviate the drug-related drug threat within it to some extent. thomas@hhs.gov
