But that this opposition is not a good thing, that it is not a sign of a healthy, vibrant, and growing economy, is what I think is the real danger. And that is why I think it is so important to have a strong, vibrant, and growing economy. And that is why I think it is so important to have a strong, vibrant, and growing economy.
