Reichardt observed that the program was not working properly. "People are using the program incorrectly," he said. "They are not following the instructions. The program is not working properly and we need to fix it." Reichardt's observation was not a criticism of the program itself, but rather a statement of fact. "The program is not working properly and we need to fix it," he said. "The program is not working properly and we need to fix it," he said. "The program is not working properly and we need to fix it," he said.

Although the short-circuit was not as effective, which is most likely the primary reason, further, and somewhat unclear, the average number of lightning strikes per year was about 100 per house. The estimated electricity loss was on the order of 1000 kWh per house per year.
