Abstract

Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of older adults. The study was conducted in a community-based setting. The participants were 60 older adults (mean age = 72.5 years) who were recruited from a local senior center. The participants were divided into two groups: a control group and an intervention group. The control group did not participate in the walking program, while the intervention group participated in the walking program. The walking program consisted of 12 weeks of supervised walking, three times per week, for 30 minutes per session. The participants in the intervention group showed significant improvements in physical and psychological health compared to the control group. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program can improve the physical and psychological health of older adults.
