The injector operates injection quantity and timing by moving the TNR (TNR) plug using the solenoid valve. When the TNR is in the closed position, the fuel pressure within the rail is maintained at the high-pressure level. When the TNR is in the open position, the fuel pressure within the rail is reduced to the low-pressure level. The TNR is in the closed position when the engine is idling or at low load. The TNR is in the open position when the engine is at high load or during acceleration. The TNR is in the open position when the engine is at high load or during acceleration.
