Abstract. This paper presents a new method for the automatic generation of a set of test cases for a program. The method is based on the use of a heuristic search algorithm. The search is performed on a graph whose nodes represent the program's execution states. The edges represent the possible transitions between these states. The search starts from the initial state and continues until a goal state is reached. The goal state is defined as a state where the program's output is different from the expected output. The search algorithm is implemented using a breadth-first search strategy. The results of the search are used to generate a set of test cases. The test cases are then executed on the program to verify its correctness. The method is applied to a program that calculates the factorial of a number. The results show that the method is able to generate a set of test cases that cover all the possible execution paths of the program.
