

Edith Wharton

Edith Wharton (born Edith Newbold Jones, January 24, 1862 – August 15, 1937) was an American writer and designer. Wharton drew upon her insider's knowledge of the upper-class New York "aristocracy" to portray realistically the lives and morals of the Gilded Age. In 1907, she became the first woman to win the Pulitzer Prize in Fiction, for her novel The Age of Innocence. She was inducted into the National Academy of Arts in 1928. Among her other well-known works are The House of Mirth, the novella Ethan Frome, and several notable ghost stories.

Despite not publishing her first novel until she was forty, Wharton became an extraordinarily productive writer. In addition to her 15 novels, seven novellas, and eighty-five short stories, she published poetry, books on design, travel, travel and lecture notes, and a memoir.

Many of Wharton's novels are characterized by subtle irony, and she is often credited with being the first to use the term "social realism" in her writing. Her work is characterized by a keen eye for detail and a deep understanding of the social mores of the Gilded Age.

Wharton's literary career began with her first novel, The House of Mirth, published in 1905. The novel was a critical and commercial success, and it established Wharton as a leading voice in the American literary scene. Her subsequent works, including The Age of Innocence and Ethan Frome, further solidified her reputation as a master storyteller.

Immigrant Industry and the Arts
Immigrant growth and the job of ethnic immigrants created a new social structure in the United States. The immigrant population was concentrated in urban areas, particularly in the Northeast and Midwest. This led to the development of ethnic enclaves, where immigrants from the same country or region lived together. These enclaves provided a sense of community and support for newcomers, but they also led to social and economic segregation.

Wharton's novels often reflect the social and economic changes of the Gilded Age. Her work is characterized by a keen eye for detail and a deep understanding of the social mores of the Gilded Age. Her novels often explore the lives of the upper class and the impact of social and economic changes on their lives.
