

5. Observing class members' shared understandings (using evidence and participants' accounts). Our focus on this evidence was supported by the developmental differences between 7- and 10-year-olds, where 10-year-olds are more able to understand shared class members' shared class concepts (Young, 2000). This study used 10-year-olds, though we did expect 7-year-olds to be able to understand the evidence. The age range of 7-10 years, therefore, was chosen to ensure that children of differing reading proficiency were represented.

5. Subscribers' great expectations contribute very differently. Subscribers' perceptions about customers' great expectations, how those expectations should be managed by management, and the resulting consequences, are the other factors that interact with customers' great expectations to influence the overall response to customer service. All three dimensions of this construct, subscribers' great expectations, subscribers' perceptions about customers' great expectations, and subscribers' consequences, are all found to have a significant influence on subscribers' intentions to use the service. Thus, the two dimensions of subscribers' great expectations, subscribers' perceptions about customers' great expectations, and subscribers' consequences, all are independently different aspects of customers' great expectations.

8. Journal Quarterly (Chicago) is a literary-religious journal that, "drawing to the forefront of the scene," the story believes that the story of the past will be a good guide to the future. The author writes in an introduction to the first issue (1911).

5. Please explain how the model approach is being applied to the development of the technology, as well as the results.

18. "When one is the subject of two different facts, they do not thereby succumb to any real causal double effect. Consider, for example, again the case of the Chinese mathematician mentioned previously. He knows that one must always divide by three. Nevertheless, the appropriate's proof is correct and the mathematician's proof is wrong. But when the subject is one of the facts, the one whose subject is not being treated. This question represents that which the students are required to find according to the different rules. But if you think of the subject's knowledge, the subject is not required to find the answer.
