

inpatient facility transfer (e.g., hospital or SNF), and falls in the facility that fall would not be reported by the home health agency, as it did not occur within a 101 quality episode (i.e., the fall would have occurred after the transfer and before the ROC).

Q32. A patient falls, they have significant pain in their hip and we recommend they go to the emergency room. They are admitted, however at the time the transfer QASIS was completed we did not have the radiology report. This is obtained 4 days after the transfer and indicates a fracture of the patient's hip. With this additional information should J1900 be changed and does that change the M0000 date?

A32. When completing J1900 at transfer, discharge or death, indicate the number of falls a patient had since the most recent SOC/ROC, and any fall related injury. It is important to ensure the accuracy of the level of injury resulting from a fall. Some injuries can present themselves later than the time of the fall, or the agency may not know of the level of injury until after the QASIS assessment is completed. Agencies are encouraged to correct errors as accurate information regarding fall-related injuries becomes known. Errors should be corrected following the agency's correction policy and M0000 would not necessarily be changed.

IGNA POSTED 10/18

Q3. We are completing an unplanned discharge for a patient who was receiving nursing services only. All recent home health visits have been provided by an LPN, with the last RN visit being 2 weeks prior to this unexpected discharge. When the RN completes the discharge assessment document, should events such as emergent care use and falls that occurred since the last RN visit be reported on the Discharge QASIS in M2301 (emergent care) and J1900 (falls)?

A3. Yes, whether the discharge is planned or unplanned, all events that have occurred at the time of or any time since the most recent SOC/ROC assessment should be reported on such items as M2301 - Emergent Care and J1900 - Any Falls since SOC/ROC. This is true regardless of when the last qualifying clinician conducted a visit.
