

(B) Soaps, detergents and emulsions

Emulsions

After completing this lesson you should be able to :

- Emulsions in food are mixtures of oil and water.
- To prevent oil and water components separating into layers, a soap-like molecule known as an emulsifier is added.
- Emulsifiers for use in food are commonly made by reacting edible oils with glycerol to form molecules in which either one or two fatty acid groups are linked to a glycerol backbone rather than the three normally found in edible oils. The one or two hydroxyl groups present in these molecules are hydrophilic whilst the fatty acid chains are hydrophobic.
