216 8 Accounting for Merchandising Operations

Record sales under a perpetual inventory system.

In accordance with the revenue recognition principle, companies record sales revenue when the performance obligation is satisfied. Typically, the performance obligation is satisfied when the goods transfer from the seller to the buyer. At this point, the sales transaction is complete and the sales price is established.

Sales may be made on credit or for cash. A sales document should support every sales transaction, to provide written evidence of the sale. Each major sales document provides evidence of each sale. A sales invoice, like the one shown in Illustration 8-4 (page 216), provides support for a credit sale. The original copy of the invoice goes to the customer, and the seller keeps a copy for use in recording the sale. The invoice shows the date of sale, customer name, total sales price, and other relevant information.

The sales invoice has entries for each sale. The first entry records the sale. The seller increases (debits) Cash or Accounts Receivable if a credit sale and also increases (credits) Sales Revenue. The second entry records the cost of the merchandise sold. The seller increases (debits) Cost of Goods Sold and also decreases (credits) Inventory for the cost of those goods. Here, each of the business account will show a net increase the amount of inventory that should be on hand.

In Illustration 8-4, assume a credit sale transaction. PW Audio Supply records its first sale of $1,000 to Jack Brown (see Illustration 8-4) as follows (assume the sales discount cost PW Audio Supply $1,000).

Account	Debit	Credit
Cash	1,000
Accounts Receivable		1,000

Jack Brown
on credit

Account	Debit	Credit
Accounts Receivable	1,000
Sales Revenue		1,000

The second entry is a credit sale to Jack Brown on account (PW).

Account	Debit	Credit
Cost of Goods Sold	1,000
Inventory		1,000

Account	Debit	Credit
Cost of Goods Sold	1,000
Inventory		1,000

The second entry of merchandise sold to Brown (PW) to Jack Brown.

For internal decision-making purposes, merchandising companies may use more than one sales account. For example, PW Audio Supply may decide to keep separate sales accounts for its sales of TVs, stereo players, and headphones. Each separate account for selling your children's clothing, and all equipment—or a single sales account for various different accounts. By using separate sales accounts for major product lines, rather than a single combined sales account, company management can more clearly monitor sales trends and respond more strategically to changes in sales behavior. For example, if TV sales are increasing while stereo player sales are decreasing, PW Audio Supply might concentrate more on advertising and pricing policies for their sales to ensure they are optimal.

OTHER NOTES

Many companies are using a computer to record sales. For example, the computer records sales and provides that data to the company's accounting system.

On its income statement presented to outside investors, a merchandising company normally would provide only a single sales figure—the sum of all of its individual sales accounts. This is true for two reasons. First, providing detail on all of its individual sales accounts would add considerable length to its income statement. Second, companies do not want their competitors to know the details of their operating results. However, internally, regardless of the disclosure of income from three to five lines. The reason: The additional computer-related financial statement data is better evidence the growth of the company's customer and internal business.
