

A Microscale Titration

Propose the appropriate titration technique according to the characteristics of the acid-base system and the experimental conditions that determine a titration's success.

Answer calculations:

1. Propose a series of titration steps (Procedures 1, 2, and 3, below):

Step 1: 20 drops

Step 2: 20 drops

Step 3: 20 drops

2. From above 1, the calculated volume is 60:

60 mL volume

3. Steps of titration from Procedures 1, 2, and 3, above:

Step 1: 20 drops

Step 2: 20 drops

Step 3: 20 drops

4. Now that you have the volume of the solution, calculate the average concentration of the titrant that was used:

calculated amount: 0.001 M

5. Now that you have the volume of the solution, calculate the molarity of the titrant, and the average of the three (Procedures 1, 2, and 3) calculated molarities of the titrant and the standardization:

average of three values: the titrant amount: 0.001 M

6. Now the average concentration of the titrant is 0.001 M, calculate the average:

average of three values: 0.001 M
