Abstract: This research examines the impact of the 2008 financial crisis on the financial health of small businesses. The study uses a survey of small business owners to measure their financial health and the impact of the crisis. The results show that the crisis has had a significant negative impact on the financial health of small businesses, with a decrease in sales, a decrease in profits, and an increase in debt. The study also finds that small businesses with higher financial health before the crisis were more likely to survive the crisis. The implications of the study are that small businesses should focus on improving their financial health before a crisis occurs, and that the government should provide support to small businesses during a crisis.
