Objection Debra Lieberman,Carlton Patrick,2018-07-03 Why do we consider incest wrong even when it occurs between consenting adults unable to have children Why are words that gross us out more likely to be deemed obscene and denied the protection of the First Amendment In a world where a gruesome photograph can decisively influence a jury and homosexual behavior is still condemned by some as unnatural it is worth asking is our legal system really governed by the power of reason Or do we allow a primitive human emotion disgust to guide us in our lawmaking In Objection psychologists Debra Lieberman and Carlton Patrick examine disgust and its impact on the legal system to show why the things that we find stomach turning so often become the things that we render unlawful Shedding light on the evolutionary and psychological origins of disgust the authors reveal how ancient human intuitions about what is safe to eat or touch or who would make an advantageous mate have become co opted by moral systems designed to condemn behavior and identify groups of people ripe for marginalization Over time these moral stances have made their way into legal codes and disgust has thereby served as the impetus for laws against behaviors almost universally held to be disgusting corpse desecration bestiality and as the implicit justification for more controversial prohibitions homosexuality use of pornography Written with a critical eye on current events Lieberman and Patrick build a case for a more reasoned approach to lawmaking in a system that often confuses gross with wrong

Neutral Atom Imaging Using a Pulsed Electromagnetic Lens Jamie Ryan Gardner, 2017-10-30 This book describes the design construction and characterization of a new type of aberration corrected neutral atom lens Atom beam control plays a crucial role in many different fields ranging from fundamental physics research and materials science to applied nanotechnology Despite this atom optical elements like lenses and mirrors remain relatively underdeveloped compared to their counterparts in other optics fields Although aberration correction is addressed quite comprehensively in photon and electron lenses no credible research efforts have yet produced the same technology for neutral atoms It reports on progress towards a neutral atom imaging device that will be useful in a range of applications including nanofabrication and surface microscopy It presents a novel technique for improving refractive power and correcting chromatic aberration in atom lenses based on a fundamental paradigm shift from continuous two dimensional focusing to a pulsed three dimensional approach Simulations of this system suggest that it will pave the way towards the long sought goal of true atom imaging on the nanoscale The book further describes the construction of a prototype lens and shows that all of the technological requirements for the proposed system are easily satisfied Using metastable neon from a supersonic source the prototype was characterized for three different focal lengths and a diverse range of apertures Despite some manufacturing imperfections lower distortion and higher resolution than has been shown in any previous hexapole lens was observed Comparison with simulations corroborates the underlying theory and encourages further refinement of the process
