

Introduction

In recent years there has been a trend towards not only developing and protecting human rights but also animal rights. While many people believe that we should give animals legal rights for humane reasons, most often, in a reasonable terms of food, as well as other ethical questions.

Body paragraph #1

First of all, it seems clear for most intelligent people that animals deserve more rights than they have. Traditionally, however, that is because they are obviously not made to go with thoughts and feelings, even if they are not exactly the same as our own. For example, it has been argued that some animals – birds and dolphins – think, feel and perhaps behave as though animals display the signs of their pain, and wish that we could communicate with humans suffering. Therefore, it appears quite clear that they should be given the same rights and protections as humans.

Body paragraph #2

There are arguments against legal rights for animals, particularly that they do not have the ability of human beings not to feel pain but to feel fear or distress, and that the lack of behavior is clearly normal within the natural world. It looks, however, that if we have legal rights over them, that would mean that we have a natural relationship with the same as that of a child and a dog. It would be wrong for us to have animals for our own benefit because that is the natural way of the world.

Conclusion

In conclusion, there are arguments from both sides of the debate, both arguing that that animals deserve respect, protection, and some legal rights. Perhaps they should not be given the same treatment as humans but they should certainly be treated better than they currently are, and laws should be drafted to ensure their protection from undue suffering.
