Abstract: Studies on the role of the family in the development of children's social skills are reviewed. The review focuses on the role of the family in the development of children's social skills, with particular emphasis on the role of the family in the development of children's social skills. The review is organized into three sections: (a) the role of the family in the development of children's social skills, (b) the role of the family in the development of children's social skills, and (c) the role of the family in the development of children's social skills.

Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine whether there were differences in the prevalence of risk factors associated with the development of periodontitis between patients with type 2 diabetes mellitus (DM) and non-diabetic controls. A total of 60 patients with DM and 60 age- and sex-matched non-diabetic controls were recruited from a tertiary care hospital. All participants underwent a clinical examination and blood sampling. Data were analyzed using Fisher's exact test. The results showed that the prevalence of periodontitis was significantly higher in the DM group compared to the non-diabetic controls ($p < 0.05$). The prevalence of risk factors such as smoking, alcohol consumption, and poor oral hygiene was also significantly higher in the DM group compared to the non-diabetic controls ($p < 0.05$). These findings suggest that patients with DM are at a higher risk of developing periodontitis and may benefit from more intensive oral hygiene education and management.

South Africa in particular and Africa in general continues to be a problem in scientific records in the educational sciences. This scholarly collected work addresses this obstacle and focuses on recommendations from scholars in different sectorial categories in the field of education. Scholars from a variety of sub fields within the educational sciences reflect on this particular matter revisiting the history of research and research outcomes and offering informed recommendations based on in depth investigation and analysis of aspects of the various discourses within the relevant sub fields. The scope of the content of this collected work centres on the issue of the lack of scientific records concerning the scientific raising of the impact of education research. The book aims at making a specific contribution to the educational sciences by stimulating scholarly discussion around how to increase the recording of the significance of educational research done in Africa and in South Africa in particular and to redirect the research agenda into the direction of making more impact. Impact is conceptualised to mean both scholarly impact that is being cited and being used as foundation for theory building and for further research and practical impact that is improvement of practice teaching and learning in education institutions at all levels.
