F. Skinner I have chosen the novel Holes by Louis Sachar with the quotation above in mind even though it might not be classified as one of the great books i.e. of high Literature it is definitely one of those books that can serve to teach a love of reading Holes is the exciting story of Stanley Yelnats' mind the palindrome an overweight boy who is unjustly sent to Camp Green Lake a boy's juvenile detention centre Stanley knows that this is due to a curse on his no good dirty rotten pig stealing great great grandfather who did not fulfil a promise he had made to Madame Zerkow At the camp Stanley and six other boys are forced to dig holes every day in order to pay their debt to society However Stanley soon finds out that there is more than character building going on The novel and its main themes friendship racism justice fate etc. can be exploited in many appealing ways for classroom reading In the open learning sequence I have prepared two basic approaches to reading a book in class are incorporated First there is the classical approach with its well established successful activities whereby the focus of assessment is as is usual on an upper secondary level on both language and content On the other hand the activities on the second work sheet focus on the themes dealt with in the book Since friendship bullying racism etc are issues in nearly every teenager s life it can be motivating for the students to deal with these topics from a personal point of view in a creative way The activities on both work sheets are designed in a way that allows the students to plan which tasks to do when themselves
