Report Highlights

Automating is the transformative challenge facing product designers – making it harder to evaluate the impact of different design alternatives.

When the need to reduce product development timelines is coupled with the need for simulation, the need for a multi-physics simulation platform is clear.

Simulation has become an essential part of product development, enabling designers to deliver products that are more efficient, more reliable, and more cost-effective.

Implementing a multi-physics simulation platform is a complex task, requiring a deep understanding of the product development process and the ability to integrate multiple simulation tools.

As the product development process becomes more complex, the need for a multi-physics simulation platform becomes more critical. This report explores the challenges of implementing a multi-physics simulation platform and provides a roadmap for success.
