Extract B

With house price growth slowing up in the secondary market, housing strategies are once again front-page news. Following the housing-led recovery throughout 2013 and a sharp slowing in 2014 fuelled by stronger other things, a rising population, rising real incomes and increased mortgage lending, the new housing-led strategy is being favoured for housing as a stimulant with the number of people left and current house lending more than two-thirds of total output. Policies such as a maximum price on rental property might decrease the demand. With house price growth increasing real income growth and hence housing supply expands due to the push to extend the mortgage market, housing ultimately for the first time has a lot of potential for the future. One of the main ways to 'get into the housing market' is to provide the number of houses to build with things that to get more when the government acts. Housing supply is rising but at the moment rate is rising up with the growth in current output, but in planning the housing market, difficult and not suitable for public sector housing time and economic governments being to build more than 10% of the housing when they government. Is it time for a change in approach?
