Review ,1903 Tar Hollow Trans Stacy Jane Grover,2023-06-20 I've lived a completely ordinary life so much that I don't know how to write a transgender or queer or Appalachian story because I don't feel like I've lived one Though in searching for ways to write myself in my stories maybe I can find power in this ordinariness Raised in southeast Ohio Stacy Jane Grover would not describe her upbringing as Appalachian Appalachia existed farther afield more rural more country than the landscape of her hometown Grover returned to the places of her childhood to reconcile her identity and experience with the regional culture and with the people who had raised her She began to reflect on her memories and discovered that group identities like Appalachian and transgender are linked by more than just the stinging brand of social otherness In Tar Hollow Trans Grover explores her transgender experience through common Appalachian cultural traditions In Dead Furrows a death vigil and funeral leads to an investigation of Appalachian funerary rituals and their failure to help Grover cope with the grief of being denied her transness Homeplace threads family interactions with farm animals and Grover's coming out journey illuminating the disturbing parallels between the American Veterinary Association's guidelines for ethical euthanasia and the World Professional Association for Transgender Health's guidelines for transgender care Together her essays write transgender experience into broader cultural narratives beyond transition and interrogate the failures of concepts such as memory metaphor heritage and tradition Tar Hollow Trans investigates how the labels of transgender and Appalachian have been created and understood and reckons with the ways the ever becoming transgender self like a stigmatized region can find new spaces of growth History of Bucks County, Pennsylvania William Watts Hart Davis,1905 Cyclopedia of Biblical, Theological, and Ecclesiastical Literature John McClintock,1887 The Pennsylvania-German Society ,1902 Includes proceedings addresses and annual reports Religious and Secular Reform in America David K.
