Post-Activity Questions

1. Look carefully at the marked physiographic ocean chart. Are the locations of earthquakes and volcanoes randomly scattered over the Earth or do they seem to be more concentrated in certain areas? Explain your answer.

The locations of earthquakes are definitely not scattered randomly. All earthquakes are on or around the fault lines, mainly in western North America and eastern Asia.

2. Which area of the world had the most volcanic activity according to the data provided?

Eastern Asia near Japan and down to above Australia.

3. Which area of the world had the most earthquake activity according to the data provided?

The most earthquake activity was located in eastern Asia near Japan.

4. The physiographic chart shows many geologic features of the ocean floor. Write the names of the major geologic features of the ocean floor that are located at or very near the location of the earthquakes and volcanoes that were plotted, i.e., basins, ridges, rises, trenches.

Convergent and divergent plates cause earthquakes and volcanos, and these form both mountain ranges and trenches.

5. Look carefully at the marked chart and assembled puzzle. If the edges of each crustal plate "puzzle" piece represent crustal plate boundaries, describe the relationship between the location of volcanoes and earthquakes and the boundaries of the crustal plates. Be specific.

The location of volcanos and earthquakes tend to sit right on the edges of each piece, where one plate meets another.

Challenge Questions:

6. Look carefully at the marked chart and a textbook, if necessary, to answer Questions #6a and #6b.
 - a. Which geologic feature(s) of the ocean floor do you think have been formed by crustal plates moving together?

Deep trenches

- b. Which geologic feature(s) of the ocean floor do you think have been formed by crustal plates moving apart?

Oceanic ridges/underwater mountains
