

Marking Scheme (AS 2007):

Q3

Many candidates showed a good understanding of part (a) and showed a conscious effort to address the question on whether they agree with the comment or not.

Most candidates could use daily life examples to support their arguments.

Most candidates not only expressed their views and provided coherent arguments to one of the recommendations they supported, but also commented on the other two.

Some candidates provided a well-balanced answer in part (b).

Candidates who did not perform well just listed the pros and cons of the three recommendations and provide no elaboration of their stance on the issue.

Extended Reading:

Freedom of information laws ("Sunshine law") allow access by the general public to data held by national governments. The emergence of freedom of information legislation was a response to increasing dissatisfaction with the secrecy surrounding government policy development and decision making. They establish a "right-to-know" legal process by which requests may be made for government-held information, to be received freely or at minimal cost, barring standard exceptions. In many countries there are constitutional guarantees for the right of access to information, but these are usually unused if specific support legislation does not exist. Additionally, the United Nations Sustainable Development Goal 16 has a target to ensure public access to information and the protection of fundamental freedoms as a means to ensure accountable, inclusive and just institutions.

In Hong Kong there are no laws specifically enacted to guarantee the freedom of information.

Since March 1995, the Government of Hong Kong has promulgated a "Code
