

Apple iPad Take apart guide:

- First of all take the iPad Opening tool and slide it between the display screen of the iPad and the metal frame (aluminum frame) to pry up the screen on each side. This will release the tabs that hold the screen together. Beware that some of the clips (tabs) may break in the process, and you will need to replace them. You can greatly minimize the risk of damaging these clips during prying by using iPad Opening Tool which is specifically designed for this purpose. When prying off the screen you need to be careful not to pry near the the Volume button, head phone port and Home button as you could damage these parts.

- As you open the case you will need to release one of the ribbon cables that is connected to the board indicated by the green arrow-head in figure 1. Using a safe open pry tool you must flip up both locks (shown by the orange arrow-heads in figure 1) that hold the ribbon in place before you are able to slide the ribbon out.
- You will then have to unplug the connector from the motherboard shown by the blue arrow-heads in figure1. It will be very easy to pull it up and off the motherboard. It is just like a plug and will pop right off.

- While lifting the screen up from the back case there will still be another connector that is attached and will need to be removed. This final connector has a small hinge that
