Light In The Dark Pool:

Light in the Dark Pool Kirsten B. Ellicson, 2014-12-14 The poems in Light in the Dark Pool probe the mystery disorientation frustration pain disappointment struggle shock and joy of human relationships Human language is fragile speech can distort thought and analysis and writing can counteract the very clarity they seek Relationships multiply the risk of error as we strive or don't to interpret another's words to understand her or his radically different position As we navigate the pitfalls and often doomed pathways of communication we wonder if the effort is worth it if the attempt to understand brings more sadness and isolation than not trying to understand and if the passage of time brings more cause for wariness than for healing Is it better to retreat into a rigid fortress Is it better to choose silence The stakes are high expanding ourselves to see through others' eyes means entering foreign territory Yet the purpose of poetry is to illuminate the rare and blazing jewels of life the unexpected moments of profound intimate and honest connection with others when the fear of vulnerability and the instinct for self protection become irrelevant We are fully ourselves past present and future while we also fully engage with another person
