The environmental health of children is a complex issue that involves many different factors, including air quality, water quality, and the presence of hazardous substances. This paper discusses the environmental health of children and the factors that affect it. It also discusses the role of the government in protecting the environmental health of children and the role of parents in protecting their children's health.

To the management, "the social environment" could have meant different things: human relationships, "solidarity," or "teamwork" etc. These observations were made through various dimensions of focus on time, they included social and structural factors and the relation was dependent on the nature of the situation. Thus, the social environment was not a static, ready-made or just one; only the state of relations between the two entities (state) influenced social structure and vice versa. In addition, any social structure, ultimately, the structure was a social relation. Thus, social structure was not a static factor but a dynamic one, subject to change by various factors, as a consequence of different social structures, there was change.
