These results are consistent with the hypothesis that the effect of the intervention on the use of evidence in decision-making is not a simple function of the intervention itself, but is also a function of the individual characteristics of the participants. The results suggest that the intervention may be more effective for individuals who are more open to change, and that the intervention may be less effective for individuals who are more resistant to change. These results also suggest that the intervention may be more effective for individuals who are more motivated to change, and that the intervention may be less effective for individuals who are less motivated to change. These results are consistent with the hypothesis that the effect of the intervention on the use of evidence in decision-making is not a simple function of the intervention itself, but is also a function of the individual characteristics of the participants.
