

Introduction

Psychiatric Nursing or Mental health nursing is the speciality of that cares for the people of all ages with mental illness or mental distress. Psychiatric Mental health nursing works within nursing models utilizing care plans and seeks to care for the whole person.

Mental health nurses are dealing with the most vulnerable people in society – people who are living chaotic lifestyles, people who are contemplating suicide. More performance measures are required in mental health nursing to provide a more structured view of what mental health nurse are doing.

According to a study, Psychiatric Nursing is the least preferred speciality because of association with pejorative attitudes towards mental health. There is a minimum nurse-patient ratio for care hospitals of mentally ill patients. Hospitals care may be compromised by forces that have increased mentally ill patient acuity and reduced ratio of psychiatric nurses, thus lowered the care and management of nurses to mentally ill patients. According to a journal, turnover of highly skilled nurses is a problem for many psychiatric hospitals. Nurses are the frontline professional staff for psychiatric patient; without them, the provision of highly quality care is difficult. Several factors related to nurses who won't prefer the Psychiatric Nursing field includes the nurses perception of the risk of assault by patients. Assault has been a concern for the staff in psychiatric hospitals. Other factors that influence the recruitment and retention of nurses in mental health services, these include the choice of work location, work routine, off duty/staff allocation arrangements, teamwork and environment.

The researchers have observed that Psychiatric Nursing is one of the least preferred fields of speciality. We want to conduct this study because we want to identify the effects of disproportionate nurse-patient ratio, because in the care and management of psychiatric patients we focus more in the therapeutic use of self rather than pharmacological management. The researchers also wanted to conduct this study because they can easily relate it to their concept this semester, which is the care and management of Psychiatric patients.
