

Module Overview

What are the coefficients in a chemical equation for combustion?

What?

A chemical equation represents what we see when we observe a reaction and predict products from reactants. Coefficients in formulas before them are necessary to conserve mass during a chemical reaction. Typically, when we balance the chemical equation we start by counting individual products. However, in real life, the reaction represented by an equation occurs on a microscopic, molecular level. Most of what we see (large molecules) are broken down at such a small level in the equation. For example, the hydrogen chemical equation shows that water molecules are produced from hydrogen gas and oxygen gas. The oxygen gas will require two different oxygen chemical reactions for combustion.

Model 1 – H₂ Chemical Reactions

1. Consider the reaction in Model 1.

a. What are the coefficients for each of the following substances in the reaction?

b. Does your coefficient value in balance the equation in Model 1?

2. Consider each reaction below as a chemical reaction in Model 1.

a. Halving the amount of reaction consumed and produced units.

b. Doubling the units of H₂, or O₂, or H₂O. Balance the reaction the lowest whole coefficient possible.

	H ₂ Coefficient	O ₂ Coefficient	H ₂ O Coefficient	Ratio H ₂ :O ₂ :H ₂ O (Lowest)
Use a single product. How many molecules of each substance would be consumed or produced?
If the reaction consumed one than double units. How many molecules would be consumed or produced?
If the reaction consumed 1000 times. How many molecules would be consumed or produced?
