optimize just one factor but to balance various interdependent aspects of life In the COVID 19 crisis decisions had to be made concerning e g whether to close schools and restaurants and the economic consequences of a 3 or 4 week lock down had to be considered As such rather than one simulation focusing on a very limited aspect a framework allowing the simulation of several different scenarios focusing on different aspects of the crisis was required Moreover the results of the simulations needed to be easily understandable and explainable if a simulation indicates that closing schools has no effect this can only be used if the decision makers can explain why this is the case This book describes how a simulation framework was created for the COVID 19 crisis and demonstrates how it was used to simulate a wide range of scenarios that were relevant for decision makers at the time It also discusses the usefulness of the approach and explains the decisions that had to be made along the way as well as the trade offs Lastly the book examines the lessons learned and the directions for the further development of social simulation frameworks to make them better suited to crisis situations and to foster a more resilient society
