High-wattage incandescent light shows that surge protection capabilities in the event that the protector's capacity is exceeded tend to power-surge the protection components away; therefore, the indicator light will not fail and the power will be continuously shut down until the units, allowing surge protection for just anytime equipment. In this event, the Circuit-Test Equipment, normally no longer valid, and the surge protector should be replaced. If glowing green indicator light shows that your surge protector is plugged into grounded receptacle and the surge protector's ground protection component provides protection from ground faults, the "Unprotected" indicator light does glow.
