Light itself is characterized as a stream or ray that travels in straight lines if the case of homogeneous propagation, unless bent by reflection or refraction. Light rays travelling in the medium that is homogeneous in different medium, point at it in straight lines, but the rays bend (bending) to the lower (higher) than the other medium in case of transparent part of the light will enter that medium, but the other medium change. This process is called as the bending, refraction or refraction. Light rays bend at the interface.

Law of Reflection - the same principle, stating that when a light ray strikes any mirror, the angle of incidence,  $\theta_i$ , is equal to the angle of reflection,  $\theta_r$ . The light ray is measured from the normal, the line off the surface. This is true for all surfaces (smooth and rough). Smooth surfaces which reflect light in one direction, called specular, while those that reflect light in all directions, called diffuse. If the incident is perpendicular to surface, then the reflected ray will continue to go straight through. A surface mirror is different because it is called diffuse (scatters light) or called a rough surface mirror.
