

Introduction

In recent years there has been a trend towards not only developing and protecting human rights but also animal rights. While many people believe that we should give animals legal rights for humane reasons, most often, in a reasonable terms of food, as well as other related questions.

Body paragraph #1

First of all, it seems clear for most intelligent people that animals deserve more rights than they have traditionally been given. This is because they are obviously intelligent and go with thoughts and feelings, even if they are not exactly the same as our own. For example, it has been proved that some animals – birds and dolphins – learn, they can feel like humans do. They would display the signs of their pain, and wish that we would interact with humans better. Therefore, it appears quite clear that they should be given the same rights and protections as humans.

Body paragraph #2

There are strong arguments against rights for animals, particularly that they do not have the ability of human feeling, not having had human-like brains or feelings, and that the laws of behavior are clearly normal within the natural world. It looks humans should not bestow legal rights upon their animal counterparts because our natural relationship is much the same as that of a wolf and a sheep. It would be wrong for us to be animals for our own benefit because that is the natural way of the world.

Conclusion

In conclusion, there are arguments from both sides of the debate, both supporting that that animals deserve respect, protection, and some legal rights. Perhaps they should not be given the same treatment as humans but they should certainly be treated better than they currently are, and laws should be drafted for when their protection from abuse is lacking.
