Chapter Objectives

Chapter 3, Computer Organization and Architecture, is a course prerequisite of Computer Systems: An Introduction to Modern Computing. This chapter covers fundamental concepts and techniques for computer architecture and organization. The chapter is divided into two main sections: Computer Organization and Computer Architecture. The Computer Organization section covers the internal structure of a computer system, including the CPU, memory, and I/O devices. The Computer Architecture section covers the external structure of a computer system, including the instruction set, the bus system, and the system software.

This chapter should be covered after chapters 1, 2, and 4 through 6.

Students should learn the following concepts:

- Computer Organization: Students should be able to describe the internal structure of a computer system, including the CPU, memory, and I/O devices. They should be able to explain the role of each component and how they interact with each other.
- Computer Architecture: Students should be able to describe the external structure of a computer system, including the instruction set, the bus system, and the system software. They should be able to explain the role of each component and how they interact with each other.
- Computer Organization and Architecture: Students should be able to describe the relationship between computer organization and architecture. They should be able to explain how the internal structure of a computer system affects its external structure and vice versa.
